

ANSWER TO "BEAUTIFUL SNOW."

Yes, frail one and friendless, the "beautiful snow" falls gently from heaven on all things below, clothing the earth with a mantle of white, covering the dark spots with beauty and light.

Decking the mountains and cheering the glen,
Lighting the city and dwellings of men,
Shrouding the graves where our loved ones lie sleeping,
Watching over by angels beneath willows weeping.

Snow, as if angels unfettered their wings,
To veil, oh, so softly, all sorrowing things;
Changing the blackest to purest of white,
Like charity hiding earth's sins from sight.

Oh, best child look up! For God's love, like the snow,
Descends from our Father on sinners below,
Brightening with hope the sad face that we meet,
Cheering the sin-stricken soul of the street.

Poor victims of passion, of virtue despoiled,
Cast off like a garment all faded and soiled;
Or rose that shed beauty and fragrance around,
Then is plucked from the stem to be trod on the ground.

Once fair as an angel and bright as the snow,
The sin of the city has clouded thy brow;
And set a dark look on thy half-childish face,
Where a smile used to play with innocent grace.

Now lost to thy friends, and to nearest of kin,
E'en lost to thy heartless betrayer in sin;
Outcast of the world, with a heart full of woe,
No home and no pity in cold driving snow.

Oh, rise, child of sorrow, rejoice for behold
The "Good Shepherd" seeks thee like Jesus of old,
To carry thee home like the lost sheep of yore,
Forgiveness and friendship, still for thee in store.

Come Magdalen, kneel and anoint thy Lord's feet,
And wash them with tears of repentance so sweet;
Soft accents of pardon shall set thee aglow,
Like sunshine in winter on beautiful snow.

Thou' countess as sands, e'en scarlet in dye,
Thy sin shall be whiter than snow from the sky,
Thy garment of baptism, polluted, defiled,
Restored like the robe of the Pædgal child.

Ah! lone one and friendless, a home still for thee,
And mother and sisters of sweet charity,
Under mantle of white find pity and know
God's love never melts like the beautiful snow.

MOB LAW IN ARKANSAS.

A Son of a Former Governor of Illinois Hanged by a Mob of Rufians Under a false Charge of being a Horse Thief.

Leavenworth, Kan. Correspondence Cincinnati Commercial.

A most painfully interesting story came into my possession recently, which I send to you with some hesitation, for friends may not desire the matter made public. As more or less publicity has been given it in some quarters, however, and as there is no disgrace attached to the victim of the murder, I give it as I learned it from my perennations through the West.

Many of the oldest citizens of Illinois will remember Thomas Ford, one of the oldest lawyers of that state, who was elected Governor sometime back in the "forties." Governor Ford was reckoned one of the "big" men of the State, albeit he was possessed of an overbearing modesty that retarded his advancement and kept him poor. When he died he left no property, excepting a history of Illinois, in manuscript, this, General James Shields, now a resident of Missouri, had published, and the proceeds were divided among the children. The children were adopted by different families—the youngest, Thomas, with whom we have to do in this sketch, being adopted by the late Hon. Thomas E. Moore, of Peoria, Ill., assumed that gentleman's name.

Tom served in the One hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Infantry, there made many friends, and was accounted a good soldier. Upon his return he entered the artillery service, and did good duty for a year. Then returned to Peoria, and for a short time he was engaged in writing squibs for the Transcript, the leading paper in Peoria.

In the fall of 1871, young Ford or Moore (he always wrote his name Thomas Ford Moore) became dissatisfied with Peoria, and determined to go to the far west and seek his fortune. His elder brother was somewhere in the vicinity of Wachiata, Kansas, thither Tom shaped his course, and arrived in due time. For a number of months Tom wandered up and down the plains of Kansas, now joining a hunting party for the west, now helping to bring huge droves of Texas cattle from the south. Sometimes he was in company with his brother; at other times he went alone.

At this time excitement was running unusually in regard to horseteal ing.

It was near the close of a beautiful day in July that young Ford for the first time approached the State Creek Ranch, situated near the town of Caldwell. He had walked all day, coming from the southeast, and looked forward with joyful anticipations to the rest and food he should obtain at the ranch, previous to pushing on to Caldwell, six miles further, whither he was bound. Just before he reached the ranch, he became cognizant of the fact that two men were following him, but he had a revolver, and, supposing if he interfered with him it would be for robbery, he had no fears of them.

He soon arrived at the Ranch, where he refreshed himself with meat and drink for half an hour, and then started for Caldwell. His journey lay through a woods of scattered trees and abundant brush. He had scarcely gone a mile, when three men sprang upon him from a hazel copse. So sudden was the attack that he had no time to draw a weapon, no time to make defence.

The three men were quickly joined by three others, and their leader told their captive that he was exceedingly happy to have succeeded in capturing him so easily. "For," said he, "we have been watching for you several hours past." Tom enquired for what they had arrested him. At first he could get no satisfaction, but at length he was informed that he was arrested for horse stealing.

The horror of his situation then forced itself upon the young man. He realized that he was in the hands of a mob who knew no law but that of Judge Lynch, in whose court they were jurors, judge, witnesses, attorneys and executioners. Though a thousand times innocent, he knew he would die if he could not convince these men of his innocence. He knew that the loudest and most active members of these vigilantes were the real horse thieves, who would not hesitate to hang an innocent man to divert suspicion from their guilty selves, and he knew if the present party were of that number he would certainly perish.

They asked him his name, he told them Thomas Moore, and then he informed them that he was the son of an ex-Governor of Illinois, named Ford.

"How came your name to be Moore then," said the leader, "if you are the son of a Governor by the name of Ford?"

The young man amid the shouts of derision that followed, attempted to explain. He was dragged along.

"Shut up your cackle," said one burly ruffian, striking him in the face with his fist.

A rope was here brought in view. "Take him to yonder tree," said the leader.

"My God, gentlemen," protested the unfortunate youth, "are you going to hang me on bare suspicion? Before God I am innocent of the crime, and if you will give me time and opportunity, I can prove it."

"We have all the proof we want," said the leader. "If you've got any prayers to say, make them short, for we have so many of you fellows to attend to that we haven't much time to give each of you."

"In God's name gentlemen, is there no chance for life? Must I die like a dog, for nothing? Give me some chance for my life, and if you will take it, don't murder me in such a cowardly manner."

Vain were the words of the poor boy. They attempted to bind him, but with all the young strength of a well-built frame, intensified and augmented by desperation, he threw them off. Again and again they threw themselves upon him, but in his despair he hurled them from him. But what must be the result of this? What could he expect?

He was exhausted, overpowered, thrown down and securely bound. Then a rope being passed over the fork of a tree, and the other placed around his neck, he was asked if he had any confession to make.

"No," said he, "my chief consolation in this moment of death is that I am innocent. I never stole a horse. You doubt my stories. I have letters in my pockets to prove that I am who I say I am. For God's sake look at them."

"We'll hang you first and look at your letters afterward," shouted the ruffians. "Pull away boys, and let us get away with this business."

"Oh, give him a minute to pray," said the leader. "Here young man, you may have two minutes to pray in, but make them short."

The rope was slackened up, and the doomed boy fell on his knees and engaged in silent prayer.

The two minutes over, the cruel hands at the other end of the rope pulled it taut, and with another jerk the poor innocent youth was dangling between heaven and earth. A few minutes and the dark transaction was done.

After he was dead the men examined his pockets and found letters and papers proving his identity and also proving his innocence. The villains had literally hung their man first and heard his defence afterward. One of them expressed the fear that they were engaged in a bad job. The facts of the murder came out nearly or quite as above detailed, and occasioned no little feeling in the vicinity.

It was a month before even a rumor of the sad fate of the young man reached his friends in Peoria and elsewhere. They knew him to be out upon the borders of civilization, did not expect frequent letters from him. The news was first brought back by a rough character, who heard it in Kansas, but whose word was not believed. It was not until lately that the matter was not finally to rest, and the dreadful truth forced itself upon the minds of his friends.

A charming picture is that of Saxe's widow at a fashionable party:

Her shawl was as sable as night,
Her gloves were as dark as her shawl,
And her jewels that flashed in the light—
Were as black as a funeral pall;
Her robe had the hue of the east
(How nicely it fitted her shape)
And the grief that was heaving her breast
Bulged over in billows of grape!

The golden line is drawn between winter and summer. Behind all is blackness and darkness and dissolution. Before is hope, and soft airs, and the flowers, and the sweet season of hay; and the people will cross the fields, reading or walking with one another; and instead of the rain that soaks death into the heart of green things, will be the rain which they drink with delight, and there will be sleep on the grass at midday, and early rising in the morning, and long moonlight evenings.—Leigh Hunt.

Some young men in Vienna have formed a matrimonial league. Every member of the league must be the son of a man of property and must pledge himself to marry a poor girl, one who has neither dowry nor expectations, and must forfeit 10,000 florins if he violates the pledge.

Words of Caution.

As the long evenings have come, and lamps are in almost constant use, explosions will be more frequent unless great care be taken.

An exchange suggests the following, which if observed, may tend to render coal oil safe:

Fill your lamps by daylight, and keep them well cleaned.

Never burn a lamp when it is less than half full of oil.

Turn the wick down low before trying to blow down the light.

Keep your oil can in a cool place.—Coal oil is explosive when heated.

Don't let little children meddle either with oil or lamp.

If you want to blow yourself up, just pour a little on the fire to start it.

Though the scientific expeditions sent out by nearly all civilized nations to different parts of the earth have completed their labors, as far as the observation of the planet Venus is concerned, a year of diligent work will be necessary for the reduction of the data obtained, so that it must be a long time before we really know what will be the actual result of all the trouble and expense. If it be commensurate with the magnitude of the combined international enterprise, it will impart to a certain branch of astronomy, the study of the distances, motions, etc., of the heavenly bodies, a certainty never yet obtained. Up to the present our measurement of the stars have been purely relative, and were reduced to miles by a unit derived from the supposed distances between the sun and the earth. But, this distance being in reality undetermined, it follows that, although we had a system that was perfect, that upon which the system rested was not. Accurate as we might therefore be in our calculations, the results were sure to betray imperfections. As the precise determination of the longitude depended upon these computations, it will be seen that those engaged in navigation have a direct interest in the question, as must needs be, indirectly, every one. At least six other methods of determining the distance of the earth from the sun have been adopted, and with a large degree of success. The mean distance which was fixed by Encke's calculation at 95,000,000 miles has been by more recent observations reduced to about 91,500,000, and here we stop. It is expected that the results of the present investigations will enable astronomers to fix the distance within 50,000 miles of the exact figure, which will be sufficiently near the truth for all practical purposes.—Inter-Ocean.

A physician in Oregon writes: "Take the yolk of a good egg, put in a teaspoon, and stir in as much salt as will make it thick enough not to run off, and spread a plaster and apply to the wound. Do this when bitten or stung, and I will insure your life for a sixpence. I have tried this remedy in a number of cases and have never known it to fail to cure a rattlesnake bite or the sting of a spider."

Ashes for cows. To keep cows in good health in winter, I feed a little hard-wood ashes—equal parts. Give a small handful twice a week. Try it and see how they will seem to thank you for it. It is good for them, and I think will help in case of gargle. It will clean out the foul blood; the cows will look sleek and feel good.

Another affecting extract from a Philadelphia obituary poem has appeared. It reads: Put away those little breeches, Do not try to mend the hole; Little Johnny will not want them, He has climbed the golden pole.

Whatever poets may write, or fools believe, of rural innocence and truth, and of the perils of courts, this is most undoubtedly true—that shepherds and ministers are both men, the modes of them only different.—Chesterfield.

In Lowell the other day a discouraged mill-girl said to her boarding-house mistress, who was lamenting the fate of a boarder who had eloped with a sealawag grocery keeper. "You feed us on bull-beef at $4 a week and expect us to be as contented as angels."

For a whitewash for your henhouse, put three ounces of carbolic acid in twelve quarts of lime water or whitewash, and wash the walls of the poultry house well with this wash, and you will repel the lice.

A French paper says that petroleum destroys all insects, and banishes rats and mice. Water slightly impregnated with petroleum applied to plants infested with insects, will, it is said, destroy the latter at once.

"I must take dat critter off of de ragged edge ob dis pear," said Sam Jonson, as he brushed away a cockroach that dared to intrude where he had just bitten the luscious fruit.

The name "Kalaikaua," King of the Sandwich Islands, is pronounced Kollow-kow-ab but some pronounce it Calico and others Kill-a-crow.

There is nothing to be so highly prized in woman, as a soft, sweet voice, except her ability to take in washing when hard times come.

Somebody observes that when six young ladies sit down to talk about dress, a small boy with a tin horn is a refuge for the weary.

No man can read about all these burglaries without a determination to have his wife sleep on the front side of the bed.

They say that one of the tenors in New York has "the voice of an angel and the legs of a shrimp."

It requires years of hard, patient work and a very large investment of capital to establish a good newspaper, as well as a great deal of ready money to publish it from day to day, or week to week, as the case may be. Newspapers are not, as a rule, printed for the fun of thing, nor yet to make fortunes for other people gratis, though it must be admitted that the very nature of things does lead to a great deal that way in merely advancing legitimate public interests. Why then, should newspaper people be called upon and expected to give away their substance—the fair income from their investment and the result of their labor—any more than any other class of business men? Briefly stated, the publishing of a newspaper is a business enterprise. Its object in a general way is to make a living by collecting and selling the news of the day, and affording to other business enterprises and private individuals the facilities for making their wants and advantages known to the public. To do these things costs, as we have said, a great deal of ready money and those who wish to enjoy the benefit of either of them must pay for it, or do without. That is all there is of it, and the sooner the fact is generally understood and accepted, the better and pleasanter it will be for all concerned.
